Towards Climate Action –
Planning for Mitigating Urban
Heat Island Effect using Local Climate Zones

The physical and geometrical properties of urban regions are responsible for influencing canopy layer air temperature leading to urban heat island effect (UHI). Local climate zone (LCZ) land cover classification scheme has been widely adopted to examine UHI and inter urban heat island (UHI) in developed nations. In tropical cities with heterogeneous mix of urban surface cover, several factors play a role in influencing UHI which pose the question— which built properties have a higher influence on UHI? How to tackle these? What actions are necessary?

This expert lecture deals with these aspects and discusses how to evaluate UHI response in tropical city using LCZ and city specific built parameters. The lecture paves a way forward to climate action through exploratory research helpful in identifying mitigation strategies for a complex built environment. It would enable planners, designers, and policy makers to approach urban climate interventions with sound, scientific and sustainable approach.

Revisiting Indian Cantonments (Civil Areas)

The Cantonments of India established at strategic places, generally far-ends from the native towns or cities, form a distinct colonial settlement structure due to their discrete settlement character, heritage legacy, socio-cultural and demographic attributes. Over time, due to rapid urbanization and spatial extension of cities, Cantonments have developed either as part of nearby large cities or its immediate adjoining areas, as one of the prime suburbs, with isolated pockets (civilian areas) within it. In this context, metropolitan cities like Delhi, Kanpur, Lucknow, etc., are no exception. The Cantonment Act, 2006 empowered Cantonment Boards to act as 'deemed to be a municipality' to receive grants and implement government welfare schemes, including the provision of 24 types of infrastructure and services to its residents. Besides the non-implementation of contemporary urban welfare schemes, issues like the age-old colonial infrastructure, revenue crunch through taxes and non-taxes, absence of development plan, lack of inter-jurisdictional coordination, etc., need to be addressed.

The present research will act as an input for policymakers to understand the problems of civilian areas, and suggest the necessary changes required at the policy level.
